

We all want North Dakota's young people to thrive.

Afterschool programs play a critical role in helping students succeed, keeping young people safe and supporting working families. We work hard to provide youth with a safe, nurturing environment where they learn, grow, try new things — and ultimately thrive.

This book acknowledges that work and is designed to help take it to the next level.

We dug into best practices from afterschool programs all across the country and years of research into what makes an effective afterschool program. We talked to a wide cross-section of program providers across our state — from those serving early childhood to high school students, and from programs that are just getting started to those that are well established. We aligned the data on best practices with the specific needs of North Dakota's students.

The resulting four standards and indicators are markers for an effective afterschool program.

We hope that each standard provides inspiration, reassurance and connection to resources that will help mold your program in ways that inspire youth to be their best selves and achieve positive outcomes. As a community of afterschool providers, together we're supporting North Dakota's young people today while strengthening our state's workforce of the future.

Afterschool is more than "just" after school.

Afterschool programs — also called out-of-school time (OST) — take place before school, after school, summers, weekends and during school breaks. Programs provide PreK-12 students with regularly scheduled educational or enrichment activities in a structured, supervised environment. You'll find afterschool programs in schools, school-age childcare centers, community-based organizations, universities, libraries, museums, camps and many other locations in our community.

STANDARDI: Hecitin S. Science

We've all heard the phrase "safety first." That applies to afterschool programs, too. In order to learn, grow and thrive, youth need a space that is safe and promotes their well-being. Same goes for youth workers and program staff — we need to keep them safe, too.

STANDARD 2: Relationships SInteractions

When programs create an environment that is truly welcoming for all — youth, families, staff and visitors — and when relationships are deep and authentic, we're best poised to meet students' needs. Being intentional about our relationships and interactions will foster a safe, nurturing setting where youth can try new things, get extra support and be inspired to be their best selves.

What do positive relationships & interactions look like in our program space? Continued

We treat all youth with respect and really listen to what they have to say; we show a genuine interest by paying attention when youth are talking, and by extending the conversation.	1 2 3 4
We use encouraging and affirming language when interacting with youth, that includes using phases like "please," "thank you," "you're welcome" and frequently referring to one another by name.	1 2 3 4

How do we maintain positive relationships & interactions when things don't go as planned?	How are we doing? Evidence (How do you know?)
Rules and expectations for behavior are clearly spelled out in our program policies, and so are the consequences when those policies aren't followed.	1 2 3 4
We set appropriate limits with youth, and enforce the same rules in a consistent and predictable manner.	1 2 3 4
We handle challenging situations with a calm demeanor and use positive behavior management tools, such as proximity, redirection, ignoring, reteaching, restating the expectation, etc.	1 2 3 4
We're proactive about intervening or redirecting when youth are engaging in inappropriate behavior.	1 2 3 4
Whenever possible, we address inappropriate behavior in private rather than a group setting.	1 2 3 4
We support and encourage youth to resolve their own conflicts when appropriate.	1 2 3 4

	How do we maintain positive relationships & interactions when things don't go as planned?	How are we doing?	Evidence (How do you know?)

Youth-Centered Program Design

We know our programs aren't something we do "to" or "for" youth, but rather with youth. Add in a high-quality learning environment plus program activities that speak directly to students' needs and you've got the recipe for a program that really accelerates young people's academic, social, and emotional learning.

	How does youth-centered program design incorporate youth voice?	How are we doing?	Evidence (How do you know?)
PD1	Youth are included in program design. We encourage and provide meaningful opportunities for youth voice and choice.	1 2 3 4
PD2	We encourage youth to share their ideas, and listen with respect to contributions and feedback from students.	1 2 3 4
PD3	Youth have opportunities to lead program activities.	1 2 3 4
PD4	As a staff, we model leadership behavior.	1 2 3 4
PD5	We ask open-ended questions like "why?" "what if?" and "how can we?" to extend learning. We intentionally pause after questions to allow youth time to think before answering.	1 2 3 4
PD6	We encourage youth to solve problems and think creatively.	1 2 3 4

PD7	We're intentional about creating a positive environment that keeps students safe physically, and is also an emotionally safe space where students can be their authentic selves.	1 2 3 4
PD8	Our program is equitable. All are warmly welcomed, regardless of ability, cultural background, gender identity, race, ethnicity or income.	1 2 3 4
PD9	Our rogram is culturally responsive. Our activities reflect, incorporate and value the cultures of the youth we serve.	1 2 3 4
PD10	Our daily schedule provides structure, while also allowing for flexibility.	1 2 3 4
PD11	Students have enough time to complete activities and ensure smooth transitions.	1 2 3 4
PD12	We offer a variety of ways for youth to engage in activities – either as individuals or in groups.	1 2 3 4
PD13	We're ready for the day. That means we start with a plan for activities, and have all the information, tools and supplies needed for successful completion. (And when youth guide activities in a different direction, we follow their lead as appropriate.)	1 2 3 4
PD14	Our program curriculum is research or evidence based, and our day-to-day activities are informed by best practices in the field of youth development.	1 2 3 4
PD15	We take seriously our role in supporting and nurturing young people's cognitive, physical, social and emotional needs.	1 2 3 4
PD16	We regularly connect with schools and families to make sure our program offerings align with and respond to other aspects of students' lives.	1 2 3 4

	How does youth-centered program design support workforce development?	How are we doing?	Evidence (How do you know?)
PD17	We're intentional about building upon students' interests, talents and skills to prepare them for success in school, higher education, workforce, or the military.	1 2 3 4
PD18	Our program focuses on 21st Century workforce skills, like critical thinking, creativity, collaobration, and communication.	1 2 3 4
PD19	We cultivate partnerships and mutually-beneficial collaborations with colleges, employers and other professionals in our community to help youth envision themselves in a wide variety of potential career pathways.	1 2 3 4

STANDARD 4: Leadership & Management

An effective program starts with a strong foundation. It's easy to get caught up in meeting the day-to-day needs of youth and forget to look inward on a regular basis. When our administrative practices are solid, and our staff is well supported, our programs are better prepared to help students thrive.

	What does sound leadership & management look like when it comes to measuring youth outcomes?	How are we doing?	Evidence (How do you know?)
LM6	We regularly share information about our goals and outcomes to key stakeholders, including staff, youth, families, schools and the broader community.	1 2 3 4
LM7	We collect data about our program on an ongoing basis. This information is reviewed regularly to look for areas of improvement. We make changes and adjust our program based on what the data reveals.	1 2 3 4
LM8	We proactively collect, review and respond to feedback from youth, families, staff and other stakeholders.	1 2 3 4
LM9	We have an advisory board or similar consultive body that includes perspectives from both parents and youth.	1 2 3 4

	What does sound leadership & management look like in our staffing and professional development?	How are we doing?	Evidence (How do you know?)
LM10	Our staff follow a code of conduct. We're clear about our expectations for staff behavior, and have well-defined disciplinary measures in place if the code of conduct is broken.	1 2 3 4
LM11	Our staff receive training that is relevant to their position and responsibilities. For new staff, we provide orientation and onboarding before staff begin interacting with youth.	1 2 3 4
LM12	We conduct ongoing staff trainings that include current research and best practices in youth development so we can better understand, nurture and support young people.	1 2 3 4
LM13	We make professional development a priority. Our staff is encouraged to participate in relevant professional development opportunities, and we have a budget to fund ongoing learning.	1 2 3 4
LM14	Our staff and volunteers have passed criminal background checks. This information is kept on file alongside hiring documents and job descriptions, performance evaluations, emergency contact information, training certifications and other key records.	1 2 3 4
LM15	Staff in supervisory roles receive extra training and support in program management and/or staff supervision.	1 2 3 4
LM16	As part of our efforts to retain quality staff, we regularly recognize and demonstrate appreciation for their work.	1 2 3 4
LM17	We conduct yearly performance reviews for all staff, including our director or CEO, which includes reflection on skills specific to youth work (ex: interactions with youth, fostering youth voice, etc.)	1 2 3 4
LM18	We have a process for recruiting staff, and strive to attract and retain quality staff who are representative of the youth we serve.	1 2 3 4

North Dakota's Quality Standards for Outof-School Time Programs was informed and inspired by publications and research across the field of afterschool:

- ACT Now!, Illinois Statewide Afterschool Quality Standards
- American Institutes for Research, 50 State
 Afterschool Network: Scan of Quality Systems
- Bright and Early North Dakota, Steps to Quality
- Ignite Afterschool, Believe It. Build It. Minnesota's Guide to Effective Afterschool Practices
- National Afterschool Association, Core Knowledge and Competencies
- North Dakota Department of Public Instruction, Choice Ready framework and North Dakota Early Learning Standards: Birth to Kindergarten
- Teachstone, Classroom Assessment Scoring System (CLASS)

Most importantly, we are thankful for the dedicated OST program staff who work hard every day to provide quality programming that helps young people learn, grow and realize their full potential.

Inspiring learning. Keeping kids safe. Supporting parents.

We believe that every student deserves access to high-quality, safe and affordable afterschool programming. Through technical support, professional development and advocacy, we're strengthening the programs that are key to helping North Dakota's students succeed.
